Death of Mrs. Sarah G. Freeman.

[Article Constitution]

Mrs. Sarah G. Freeman, the wife of Major James Freeman, of Gordon county, died on the 26th September ult. at the family homestead and residence of her daughter, Mrs. A. F. Hurt. Her remains were buried by the side of her husband in the cemetery at Rome. This brief record completes the life history of one who was exemplary in her piety, and whose whole aim in this world was to do good. Few on this earth ever filled their homes with sweeter or more lasting memories. For over half a century she was an ornament to the church. The joy of her husband, the glory of her children, the circle she

Oct 9, 1879

---Judge O. A. Lochrane was up last week to attend the funeral of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Sarah G. Freeman. Oct 9, 1879 moved in was brightened by her presence; the closing of her life was as the falling of a curtain, shutting out the light, but as softly folding in its shadows her fading form. With all her children weeping around her and administering to her wants, she fell asleep and her spirit left the world for a home in heaven. All that grace can give to purity, all that piety can lend to life, all that saintly sanctity can give to adorn human character was hers, and when her pale tokenment grew cold in the embrace of her children, their hearts warmed with the glow of hope, which cheered their sadness in the consciousness that her pure spirit was walking in the companionship of angels, while the goodness of her life had left a trailing light of memory, sweet as the odor of violets. November 3, 1879.

—Mrs. Sarah S. Freeman died at her residence in this county, on last Friday, the 26th, inst., aged 79 years. Mrs. Freeman was the widow of Judge James Freeman, who died in 1871. For sixty years she remained a member of the Methodist church, and during that period she has lived a most exemplary christian life, and her death is deeply felt among all who knew her. Her remains were carried to Rome, where they were interred beside her late husband.