Dear Anne,

I forgot you the night of the candy pulling and didn't send you even a slice of it, but I had several other things to make me forgetful that night.

I hope you will find it as good as the rebellion candy. I have enclosed it in my whip this morning.

I don't want you to think that I can't keep a promise made you.

When you pull your up and go to a candy store, find yourself at an end of a piece of candy and a pretty lady with a white apron in the rear of your store, ask her if she would mind giving an extra piece to all the men who help.

Yours affectionately,

My dear Madame:

On my arrival here yesterday I received your kind letter and regretted very much I found that I shall not have the pleasure of seeing General Cobb during my stay in Georgia. I spent the morning at Milledgeville where I shall probably be able to stay three or four days. I shall be compelled to spend a day at Macon and another at Ocutele and shall then put the other for a day or two and shall gladly avail myself of your kind invitation before returning to my home. I am very glad to hear that my young friends from home and household hear me in such kind remembrance. It will give me great pleasure to see them again.

With peculiar respect, I am, my dear Madame,

your affectionate and truly,

John M. Brown.
